“Help Preventing Heart Disease”

Sometimes a brother or sister in Christ needs help with a meal, something done around the house or getting to an appointment. These acts of kindness matter. But Hebrews 3:13 reminds us of another responsibility: helping one another remain faithful to the Lord.

The surrounding passage warns against developing an evil heart of unbelief and departing from the living God (Hebrews 3:12). Sin is deceitful. It promises pleasure while hiding its consequences. It encourages us to excuse what we once opposed and neglect what we once treasured. A heart can become hardened gradually, through repeated compromises.

God calls Christians to respond by exhorting one another. To exhort means to urge, encourage, and appeal. Sometimes we offer comfort to someone who is discouraged. Sometimes we lovingly warn someone whose choices are leading away from Christ. In either case, our purpose is to help a precious soul keep trusting and obeying the Lord.

Notice that this responsibility belongs to “one another.” Encouragement is the work of the whole congregation. Every Christian can make a phone call, send a thoughtful message, share a Scripture, pray with someone, or take time to listen. When a member begins missing worship or withdrawing from others, a caring conversation may reveal a burden we knew nothing about.

The word “daily” also deserves our attention. We need encouragement throughout the week. Temptation, grief, disappointment, and weariness do not wait until Sunday. A few sincere words at the right moment may help someone face another day with renewed faith.

Our help must come with humility and love. Galatians 6:1 teaches that restoring someone overtaken in a fault requires gentleness and careful attention to our own weaknesses. We are fellow Christians who also need mercy, strength, and encouragement.

Who could you encourage today? Who needs to know that someone cares about their struggles and their soul? Do not assume someone else will reach out.
