“A Successful Gospel Meeting”

How do we measure the success of a gospel meeting? We naturally notice attendance and visitors. Our greatest concern must be whether God’s Word is faithfully taught and sincerely received.

Paul wrote, “I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase” (1 Corinthians 3:6). This passage reminds us of our responsibility and God’s role. We must plant and water the seed of the kingdom.

A successful meeting begins with preparation. Before the first sermon is preached, Christians should be praying, inviting, and preparing their own hearts. Pray for the preacher, for those who will attend, and for opportunities to reach others. Invite a neighbor, coworker, friend, or family member. A personal invitation may open a door that a general announcement never will.

A successful meeting requires our participation. Our presence encourages the preacher, strengthens fellow Christians, and shows visitors that spiritual matters deserve our attention. We should come ready to sing, listen carefully, examine the Scriptures, and apply what we learn. Like the Bereans, we should receive the word eagerly and search the Scriptures daily (Acts 17:11).

A successful meeting produces opportunities for growth. We rejoice when someone obeys the gospel or when an unfaithful Christian returns to the Lord. We should also appreciate the Christian who quietly resolves to pray more faithfully, forgive an offense, resist temptation, or become more active in the Lord’s work. Some results become visible immediately; others develop as the Word takes root in honest hearts.

A successful meeting continues after the final service. Visitors need encouragement. Every member needs to practice what has been preached. James reminds us to be “doers of the word, and not hearers only” (James 1:22).

Let us do our part to make this gospel meeting fruitful. Pray earnestly, invite personally, attend faithfully, listen humbly, and follow through lovingly. As we plant and water, let us trust God to give the increase.
